Should students have a long summer holiday or should terms be longer?

All students want to go on holiday as fast as they can and have no desire to go back to school after a few ~~weeks~~^{months} of relaxing. Many of them wish they had more time to have a rest and bounce back from stress. ~~So, is it better to have a long summer holiday or long school terms?~~

First of all, studying involves a lot of efforts and ~~it~~ contains large information data, that must be learnt by heart. Some terms seem to be too tiny to gain a good knowledge, so it would be great to make ~~them~~^{terms} a bit longer. ~~It~~ would benefit students in case of learning new information and having more marks than they have now. However, it is essential not to exaggerate the situation ~~and~~ since it may lead to huge health problems among students.

Secondly, summer holiday does not only mean chill and fun. Many undergraduates have a lot of pastime activities such as playing volleyball, basketball and etc. Although ~~in summer~~ students ~~don't~~ do not attend school, they still enhance their skills and broaden their minds. Besides, some of hobbies can help ~~young~~ teenagers to decide who they want to be in the nearest future, so it proves the fact that holidays still make pupils learn new things.

Personally, I suppose that ~~nothing~~ we don't have to change anything. ~~Being an~~ Our current studying system seems to be convenient to everyone and perfectly ~~meets~~^{meets} our needs. Terms and holidays are equally divided in order to make students ~~stay~~^{be} in comfort.

To sum up, school terms and holidays are heavily connected and changing one of the elements, the second one will be affected as well. Sometimes people want to change something without understanding that the balance has already been reached.
